Market Outlook

In September, Indonesia saw a number of positive catalysts, both from domestic and global news. Domestically, September was opened with a change in the MoF chair, from Sri Mulyani to Purbaya Yudhi. Although this move drew concerns from foreign investors, domestic sentiment was much more positive given Purbaya's more explicit pro-growth stance, who from the start of his tenure acknowledged economic slowdown in the country. As an opening move, Purbaya channelled IDR200tn government money previously placed in BI to SOE banks at a deposit rate of 80% of the BI rate, thus injecting liquidity into the economy. The new MoF forbid the purchase of SBN using the funds, and mandated the use to support the growth of the real sector. We also see potential for banks to put the extra money into government programs such as MBG, which may also boost the economy via the trickle-down effect. From the monetary side, BI has also commenced another rate cut of 25bps, bringing down the rate to 4.75%. The out-of-consensus rate cut is driven by a more dovish posture from the central bank, which aimed to support economic growth compared to inflation stabilisation. Assuming a stable Rupiah and stable inflation, we think further rate cuts by BI until the end of year is possible. We also raise the fact that given Fed's rate cut and possible further follow-ups in the coming FOMC meetings, BI's own cutting space is considerably widened. We think the expansionary posture from both fiscal and monetary sides is extremely positive for both the Indonesian economy and its equity market. We see that remaining risks include failure/delay in government programs, but overall in our opinion government's stance in re-focusing toward economic growth is the first step in the correct path.
